Honorable Chairs and Fellow Delegates,

As the delegation of Indonesia, we are more than glad to be here today and attend the 27th annual session of TIMUN. As the ambassador of the delegation of Indonesia, I am more than glad to state that we are looking forward to finding solutions to the issues at hand.

We believe that in the last year, all of us have seen how much more powerful we are during a crisis when there is unity. The COVID-19 crisis has affected the whole world and we stand by the opinion that if it was not for organizations such as WHO (World Health Organization), the fight against this pandemic would have been harder and had worse consequences. We are hoping to get through these times as an outcome of our unity.

Indonesia has been a member of the United Nations for more than 70 years now and we, a country that has struggled with many crises, are hoping that global governance can be a light in the world in more than one way. Besides the COVID-19 crisis, the world is facing another huge crisis which is the climate crisis. As a country that is located across the Equator in the Indian and Pacific oceans, we are at risk of facing horrible consequences. We are incredibly concerned about the population of our country that lives in coastal areas because of the risk of sea-level rise. We understand how it might not be that important to some nations located places that would not be affected as much and therefore urge all nations to come together to prevent further and worse outcomes of this crisis, which will affect all of us negatively.

We look forward to coming together with member states and would like to wish the house productive sessions that will lead to sustainable solutions for every issue and for the sake of every individual.
